ALBERT TAYLOR'S HERE AGAIN. "There's nothin' to it, folks; we're mighty glad to get back here," said Albert Taylor, in that drawl of his at the Crawford theater last night, when the audience forced him to respond to a curtain call. And it might be said in return that the Albert Taylow following in El Paso is "mighty glad" to see him back; nobody could doubt this who was at the Crawford last night. The thenter, in reopening for the season, was packed to standing room with the admirers of the popular comedian and his supporting company. room with the admirers of the popular comedian and his supporting company, and every time the hero killed another scoundrel or made a crook throw up his hands or made love to "the girl," the audience applauded wildly. Albert Taylor creates a strong following wherever he goes and he has established himself with certain of the kill Paso theater goers just as he has elsewhere—and what is best, he knows how to hold them.

"The Man From Texas" is the name of the bill in which he opened, it tells the story of a boy who becomes lost from his mother when young and comes to Texas and becomes a cowboy. Later the story of a boy who becomes lost from his mother when young and comes to Texas and becomes a cowboy. Later he returns east and finds his mother, but learns that an impostor has taken his place as son. Meartime, the son has killed three scoundrels in Texas and he learns that it would hurt his my their's social status if he were to divulge his seal identity and claim his position, so he returns to Texas. The impostor soon dies and on his deathbed confesses his secret. Then the mother, and incidentally "the girl"—the son had met her during his temporary visit to his mother's home—come to Texas and find the son, who has become a millionaire through the discovery of oil on his ranch. The son, of course, is Albert Taylor. A real horse and a real running automobile are among the properties used on the stage. There is plenty of fun in the piece and the company is very capable.
